

The Robbery

by

Terry Bell

One evening Kamala was having a shower in the bathroom. It had been a long day and she was tired. She felt good as she poured the cool, refreshing water over her head. She was looking forward to a good night's sleep after such a hard day's work.

While she was having the shower, she couldn't hear anything. She didn't hear two thieves breaking into her house through a window downstairs. The two thieves, Sid and Fred, thought that Kamala was asleep already because they couldn't see any lights in the house.

Kamala finished her shower. 'That's better,' she thought, and she started to dry herself with her warm, fluffy towel. She didn't know there were two thieves in her house at that time.

While she was drying herself, Sid and Fred were looking around the house. They found some expensive jewellery and put it inside their bag.

'This is great!' said Fred. 'We can sell this for a lot of money.'

After a short time, they had lots of valuable things in their bag.

‘OK,’ said Sid. ‘That’s enough. Let’s go!’

But at the same time, Kamala came out of the bathroom.

When she got out of the bathroom, she thought she heard something downstairs. It sounded like people talking.

‘Who’s there?’ she said.

When she saw Fred and Sid, she screamed loudly.

‘Who are you?’ she shouted.

‘Get out of my house!’

Fred and Sid were probably more afraid than Kamala was. They ran out of the house as quickly as they could. They dropped their bag and left the house empty-handed!

While all this was happening, Kamala's husband was sleeping in his bed. He was having sweet dreams. He didn't hear a thing!

The end